Romney under fire as first primary approaches

NEW HAMPSHIRE Governor Mitt Romney is poised to take a big step toward the Republican City Presidential nomination by capturing New Hampshire, helping to rule out last-minute challenger Barack Obama and secure himself a solid electoral base.

The former governor of neighboring Massachusetts earned a second-term re-election victory in a tight race, a setback that he would have to make good on in the state of New Hampshire, where he is expected to win.

Romney's victory in the first Republican state would be an important milestone in his bid to win the White House, after his close margin in the state of New Hampshire a week ago in the first election.

A vote tallying race in the state would give him momentum going into South Carolina on Feb. 28 and Florida on Mar. 13, the two states that would be the next to hold a primary election. Romney's victory in the state of New Hampshire would be a significant win for the Republican Party.

As the first state to hold a primary, New Hampshire is believed to be the first to hold a vote on the day. It is also the first state to hold a primary election in which voters will vote on the day of the election. Romney's victory in the state of New Hampshire would be a significant win for the Republican Party.

The opponents, Republican and Democrat alike, quickly reacted to the news of Romney's victory in the state of New Hampshire and pledged to win the state in the upcoming election.
